

What Are The Values Of Philosophy Degrees?

In today's world students take up philosophy as an optional subject and not many of them think of making a living by earning a doctorate degree in philosophy. The world has become extremely materialistic and social sciences subjects like philosophy and history, cultural studies are being side tracked. But for serious students who want to get their higher educational qualifications in philosophy, there are a number of excellent universities and colleges that offer philosophy degrees.

Philosophy degrees from reputed universities are a major qualification and philosophers societies recognize and respect them. There are different schools of thought that are followed by the universities that offer philosophy degrees. One university may offer a curriculum that focuses on the history of philosophy. Here students who want to attain philosophy degrees need to read the history of philosophy through the ages starting from the sophists, ancient Greek philosophers and up to modern philosophers. Such philosophy degrees are more historical in perspective and do not focus on the different schools of philosophy.

Other philosophy degrees programs dwell on the different schools of thought related with philosophy and offer an in depth study into the different schools of thought among ancient and modern day philosophers. Some universities offer a mix of courses to attain philosophy degrees. Here reading a couple of ancient philosophers and some modern philosophers is sufficient to qualify for a philosophy degree. Getting bachelors or masters philosophy degrees is insufficient for the budding student of philosophy to find a niche for themselves in life. To join a philosopher's society or be recognized as a teacher of philosophy getting a doctorate degree in philosophy is what will matter, and with it you could make a reasonable and respected living.

Teaching philosophy degrees classes requires the teachers to be well read in this subject and should be considered by the students to be an authority on it. Philosophy degrees are in short supply and colleges and universities are having a hard time finding teachers with philosophy degrees to teach students who opt for philosophy courses.

Philosophy degrees holders can expect to go into teaching philosophy as that is the only line of work available right now. Philosophy degrees holders could do research and write for philosophy journals, but that can be quite risky and you could not bank on making a living off it. If you have a mind set like Socrates and can visit a shopping store and say 'look at all the things I don't need', then you could take the risk of founding your own theories in philosophy.
